

Raised in Nijmegen, The Netherlands, at the age of three he was listening to heavy psychedelic music of Pink Floyd. The album back cover of 'Ummagumma' is probably the reason why he got interested into drumming and recording.

10 years later he attended drumming lessons. With his high school friends, he started writing songs for their hard rock band. Influenced by bands like Metallica, Iron Maiden, Queensrÿche and of course Rush

After the band broke up, he continued playing in several other bands ranging from heavy rock to pop music: Way out, Montana Red Dog, Insert Coin, Mr Orange, The Rolero's, The Nameless and Olav and the Blues Cruise.

He works for a large semiconductor company and in the weekends, he performs with his bands and is also frequently invited to join musical projects organized by the vibrant music community in his hometown.

In parallel, he wanted to express his own musical ideas and started to experiment with computers to create his own music.

Apart from the occasional guest musician, Luke Salvatore plays all the instruments, vocals and does the full audio production (recording, mixing and mastering).

Additionally, an accompanying video clip is produced which is also an entire solo effort.

From his home, he operates a high-quality project studio for his music productions. Additionally, he executes musical productions and teaches audio recording for other bands/musicians.

He owns the music production company 'salvatoremusic' and in this capacity he collaborated with members of the dutch pop act 'the frank boeijen groep' and members of the 80s international disco sensation 'The Limit'.

Under the artist name: 'Luke Salvatore', six songs have been released on the major streaming platforms in various styles from 80s pop/rock to country.

I am interested in broadening my audience and collaborate with other artists.

Contact me if you are interested in using any of my songs for a media project.
